

Risk acknowledgement

Carrying out trading operations on international exchange markets is a form of investment with a potentially high level of profit, but this form of trading also implicates an increased degree of risk.

Using leverage when conducting operations means that basic asset rate change on existing financial markets will significantly impact your account balance, potentially positively and potentially unfavourably. There is a possibility that decreasing the value of current assets on your account below permissible level will bring about an enforced closing of your trading positions (Stop Out situation). In order to lower risk levels when conducting trading operations we recommend to use existing techniques such as Stop Loss, opening a position in the opposite direction with the same amount as an already existing one (hedging) and others.

When participating in this form of investing, there exists a risk related to possible breakdowns or interruptions with your Internet connection and computer facilities. Herewith the Company has made provisions for being able to receive instructions for closing positions via a special telephone line precisely allocated for such purposes.

Given the potentially high levels of profit and increased degree of risk for this form of investment, we strongly recommend to invest only those funds the loss of which in case of unfavourable outcomes of the transactions you have conducted will not significantly affect you or your family's financial well-being. Before making a decision to take part in this form of investment, you need to evaluate the level of your capabilities, knowledge and individual predisposition to risk.
